

Travis Hemmen

Vice President, Business Development

Travis leads business and market development for Westervelt by coordinating with private and public clients on project-specific mitigation and managing sales of existing bank credits. He identifies potential site acquisitions, analyzes market information to ensure the finished mitigation banks are a viable product.

He has a background in environmental consulting and regulatory compliance planning for a national home builder. As a consultant, he has managed small- and large-scale projects, including state and federal permitting of projects by local water agencies, port redevelopment, and dredging programs, and development of master planned communities. Travis has a B.A. degree in biology with an emphasis in ethics from the University of Northern Iowa, and an M.S. degree in environmental law and policy with an emphasis in alternative dispute resolution from Vermont Law School.
